Steady and Stronger

I woke up in a rage, something deep has ignited inside of me
And it's smoking out all the despair and the bitterness that has soaked into my teeth I'm choking up every word that I've held to the back of my tongue out of fear
Now that the fight is over
These bones will run harder, steady and stronger
My God, I'm coming home
With a lengthy story to tell of where this body has roamed

And I can feel it in my bones, in my bones
This storm is far from over
But I'm done trying to grow older
When these bones grow steady and stronger
In my bones, in my bones
This war is far from over
But I'm done trying to grow older
When these bones grow steady and stronger

When I was very young, I was too terrified to speak
So I kept my eyes to the world, and I analyzed everything around me
But when I grew into my own head
Every part what was mine, was nothing but silence
I have been still for far too long, so this voice will sing harder, steady and stronger
My God, I'm coming home
With a lengthy story to tell of where this body has roamed
